

Community Development

Cardno is involved in developing and introducing policies and strategies for participatory and decentralised planning, resource allocation and management that take into account local needs and the specific demands of the most vulnerable.

Participation and investment by individuals, families and community groups, and a focus by governments and agencies on those who stand to benefit most from reform, is essential. These efforts work to achieve the Millennium Development Goals of halving global poverty and hunger, protecting the environment, improving health and tackling illiteracy and discrimination.

Community development programs implemented by Cardno focus on:

- ▶ Improving income generating activities;
- ▶ Education and vocational training;

- ▶ Eliminating hunger and malnutrition;
- ▶ Primary health care;
- ▶ Family planning, improving reproductive health;
- ▶ Promoting the fight against HIV and AIDS;
- ▶ Increasing the security of and access to safe water and sanitation;
- ▶ Improving the availability of affordable shelter;
- ▶ Delivering child and family services;
- ▶ Promoting respect for basic social rights; and
- ▶ Tackling discrimination against minority groups and women.

In supporting governments to institute policy that supports and protects people where they live, as well as supporting communities directly, Cardno designs and implements integrated development projects that draw project beneficiaries into the planning stages of programs as well as into implementation. This involves building consensus in respect of needs and priorities, finding mechanisms for effective collaboration between local government and the communities, providing access to human, physical and financial resources and ensuring a significant integration of women into the development process.

Community Development includes:

- ▶ Analysis and prioritising of community needs;
- ▶ Involvement by communities in project planning, technical design, financial management and procurement;

- ▶ Pilot projects for modelling community development policy;
- ▶ Integrated, cross-disciplinary initiatives;
- ▶ Development of local leadership;
- ▶ Fostering responsive and accountable public institutions;
- ▶ Providing an enabling environment for economic growth and social stability;
- ▶ Supporting the transition to development for the very poor;
- ▶ Promoting and supporting the role of women in communities;
- ▶ Identifying and addressing embedded cultural practices that perpetuate inequalities.

Members of communities can drive change. Empowering people to lead their own development is the only certain way to address poverty and achieve lasting reform.

Cardno designs and implements integrated programs and works collaboratively with all stakeholders.
